About The WV People's Election Reform Coalition

The West Virginia People's Election Reform Coalition (PERC-WV) is a joint project of the Mountain State Education and Research Foundation (MSERF), the Ohio Valley Environmental Coalition (OVEC) and the WV Citizen Action Group (WV-CAG).

By maintaining a database of special interest contributions to political campaigns, tracking significant bills in the legislature, and issuing reports on our research, PERC-WV educates the public on the significant influence that special interest money plays in West Virginia politics. PERC-WV underscores problems and proposes solutions based on its research.

People across the political spectrum agree that special interest money dominates West Virginia politics, affecting everyone's issues. By focusing attention on the source of this campaign cash, PERC-WV encourages changes that can help shift the balance of power from the special interests to the public interest.

Foreword

In a democracy, every person should have an equal right to participate in our political system—regardless of race, color, creed, gender or economic status. Yet, it is increasingly difficult for an ordinary citizen to effectively participate in our democracy, either to be elected to public office or to be heard above moneyed special interests that finance election campaigns.

During the 2004 election, candidates for the state legislature collectively raised over $6 million for their campaigns. These contributions came from a variety of sources, but the majority, 63%, came from a relatively small number of special interest contributors<sup>1</sup> seeking to influence public policy. As the cost of political campaigns continues to rise<sup>2</sup>, the concerns of ordinary citizens are overshadowed by the financial clout of these special interest groups. The average West Virginian is left feeling disenfranchised and powerless to effect change in government.

A recent report in the West Virginia Public Affairs Reporter revealed some alarming statistics about West Virginians' opinions of state and local government. According to the report, "large percentages of West Virginians (38.2%) are still convinced that the state Legislature is controlled by special interest [lobbyists]. 57.2% of West Virginians believe the state is run by a few big interests looking out for themselves, and that state government can only sometimes (58.6%) or almost never (13.2%) be trusted to do what is right." While the latest survey, conducted in 2005, shows that West Virginians' opinion of state government is improving compared with a similar 1992 survey, there is still room for improvement since only 8.4% of those surveyed thought voters had the most influence over lawmakers.<sup>3</sup>

One way to restore voters' faith in government is to fundamentally change the way we finance election campaigns. The concept of "Clean Elections," a comprehensive approach to campaign finance reform pioneered by Maine and Arizona, is designed to help level the playing field by giving people from many backgrounds a shot at getting elected without relying on special interest groups and lobbyists to help finance their campaigns. If we want a government that takes into account the needs of all its citizens, we have to end the influence of coal companies, pharmaceutical firms, the insurance industry and other special interest groups who foot the bill for getting candidates elected.

The WV Public Campaign Financing Act, under consideration by the West Virginia legislature since 2002, would establish a constitutional alternative to special interest driven campaigns by providing full public financing to qualified candidates who agree to limit their spending and reject contributions from private sources. This "clean money" option would reduce candidate reliance on special interest money and enable those who lack personal wealth or access to wealthy contributors to run a competitive campaign – paving the way for ordinary citizens to have a greater voice in the political process, both as candidates and contributors.

Bias, et al., "Citizen Evaluations of West Virginia Government: Stability and Change, 1992 to 2005," the West Virginia Public Affairs Reporter, Vol. 23, No 1, April 2006 <http://www.polsci.wvu.edu/ipa/par/reporter23\_1.pdf>.

At least six states have already adopted full public financing for some or all state offices, and several others are considering similar legislation. In Maine and Arizona, the nation's first Clean Election states, this reform is making a difference in legislative outcomes.

For example, Maine passed a progressive health care initiative that enables all but its wealthiest families to purchase prescription drugs on the Medicaid list for the Medicaid price, saving as much as 60% off market prices.

In Arizona, a bipartisan coalition of legislators enacted a state budget that guaranteed all-day kindergarten for more than 150 of the state's poorest schools, raised subsidies to community colleges and provided financial help to thousands of working families in need of childcare—provisions long opposed by top lawmakers.<sup>4</sup>

By eliminating the need for traditional fundraising, Clean Elections allows legislators to focus more time on issues and constituent service and is a sensible (and cost-effective<sup>5</sup>) approach to changing the status quo and moving toward a government that is more honest, open and accountable to the needs of all its citizens, not just a select few who can afford to make big contributions to candidates.

Terminology

For the purposes of this report the following definitions apply:

“Business lobbyists” refers to lobbyists who have multiple clients with different business or “special interest” affiliations. Lobbyists who represent one “special interest group” exclusively are identified with that perspective “special interest group.”

“Identified special interest contributions” reflect the total donations received by candidates from special interest groups.

“Other business” refers to members of the business community who do not fall under one of the other specific interest groups used by PERC. This interest group includes, but is not limited to: retailers, wholesalers and funeral home directors (and their various trade organizations).

“Other lawyers” refers to lawyers who could not be identified as either a consumer (trial) lawyer or a corporate lawyer.

A “political action committee” or “PAC” is any entity (a corporation, labor union, political party or other organization) that collects funds from its employees or members to redistribute in the form of campaign contributions. PACs are required by law to keep accounts and file regular financial statements with the Secretary of State and/or the Federal Election Commission (FEC).

“Social issues” include all individual or organizational contributors affiliated with issues such as gun control and choice, among others.

A “special interest block” is an assemblage of special interest groups that unite to advocate for, or oppose, specific legislation.

A “special interest group” is a unique interest or business affiliation. PERC-WV uses 34 special interest groups to identify contributors.

“Tort reform” is any effort by health care providers, the insurance industry and members of the business community to place limits on malpractice and product liability.

“Total contributions” are the aggregate of all contributions a candidate(s) raises or receives from all sources during an election cycle.

“Unidentified contributions” are campaign donations from contributors whose occupation or business interest is not known. Other sources of campaign income that are considered unidentified include interest income and refunds.

Overview and Methodology

This report provides West Virginians with a quantitative summary of campaign contributions made in the 2004 election cycle to legislative candidates, with special focus on legislators. The raw data compiled for this report were obtained from the candidates' own financial reports filed with the Secretary of State and provided to PERC-WV by the National Institute on Money in State Politics (www.followthemoney.org).

Unless otherwise noted, the percentages given are based on "identified special interest contributions," although in some instances percentages are based on "total contributions." PERC-WV uses 36 different categories to identify the origin of contributions. Although contributions carried over from previous campaigns or from political parties, other candidates, and candidates and their family members come from "identified" sources, they are not considered "special interest" contributions for purposes of this report.

By law, candidates must identify donors who give more than $250 by name, address, occupation and employer. Donors who contribute $250 or less can be identified by name only. However, many contributors who give over $250 are often not identified and ascertaining their business interests is sometimes impossible.

Candidates list the occupation of their donors in a variety of ways. Some are very specific, listing not only the name of the employer, but also the industry represented. Others list very generic terms such as "businessman," "housewife" or "retired." Still others ignore the occupation requirement altogether. Such practices account for many of the "unidentified contributions."

PERC-WV researchers discovered a variety of reasons candidates use generic terms. Sometimes, candidates are simply careless or ignorant about either the donor's occupation or state election laws. However, the terms "housewife" or "businessman" often describe people motivated by or affiliated with major special interests. Over the past five election cycles, this has been noted with contributors affiliated with gambling and amusement interests, garbage and solid waste collectors, and the coal industry.

A variety of resources were employed in determining contributors' special interest relationships. PERC-WV databases for the 1996, 1998, 2000 and 2002 election cycles were used as well as professional rosters, phone books and direct contacts with the candidates. Volunteers from around the state also helped identify contributors. These efforts identified 92% of all contributions to legislative candidates.

PERC-WV researchers also developed four "special interest blocks" to further depict a broader influence. It is important to note that these special interest categories are somewhat subjective. Because some special interests are members of more than one block, total percentages may exceed 100%.

Executive Summary

- In 2004, candidates for the West Virginia legislature raised over $6 million for their campaigns. 63% of those contributions came from special interest groups, another 13% came from the candidates or their family members, 11% of funds were carried over from previous campaigns, and contributions from other candidates and political parties accounted for 4%. 9% of contributions were not attributable to one of the 36 categories PERC-WV uses to identify contributors.
- Our electoral system continues to be financed by a select few. PERC-WV estimates that less than one half of one percent of all voting age West Virginians contributed to a legislative campaign in 2004.
- Incumbents have a significant advantage in elections, especially when it comes to raising money. Incumbents received 72% of all special interest contributions to legislative candidates, 22% went to challengers and 6% to candidates for open seats<sup>6</sup>. Incumbents won 83% of all contested legislative seats. Out of 109 incumbents running, only 13 failed to get re-elected.
- 76% of special interest contributions went to candidates who won, while the distribution of special interest contributions to Democrat and Republican candidates was 70% and 30% respectively. The handful of third party and independent candidates who ran for the legislature raised little or no money and many were largely self-financed.
- 39% of all special interest contributions to legislative candidates were over $750. Another 2% of contributions were in excess of $500. Only 8% of special interest contributions to legislative candidates came in increments of $100 or less.
- Candidates and their family members were the largest single source of campaign funding, contributing over $800,000, or 13% of all identified contributions. However, for winning candidates, money carried from previous campaigns made up a bigger portion (14% or $633,591) of overall funding than self and family members (8% or $379,737).
- At nearly $600,000, contributions from health care providers were the biggest source of special interest campaign funding for legislative candidates, whether they were elected or not. The majority ($528,198) of health care dollars went to winning candidates, accounting for 18% of their identified special interest contributions.
- Individual contributors and PACs each accounted for roughly half of all special interest contributions to legislators in 2004, contributing $1,446,514 and $1,567,487 respectively. However, individual contributors played a more significant role in Senate races, while PACs accounted for the majority of contributions in House races. Senators received 61% of their contributions from individuals and 39% from PACS. Among Delegates, the ratio was reversed.

- Labor was the largest source of PAC contributions to legislative candidates, and the second largest source of special interest funding. Of the $499,865 that labor contributed to legislative candidates, 99% came from PACs. Although labor is a powerful political force and an active contributor to political campaigns, in 2004, it was outspent by the business sector nearly six times.
- More than half of all special interest contributions to legislative candidates came from four special interest groups – health care, labor, coal and consumer (trial) lawyers.
- Nearly all of the top ten special interest groups contributing the most in 2004 – health care, labor, coal, consumer (trial) lawyers, banking & finance, real estate & construction, education, gambling, oil & gas and insurance – were involved in major legislative battles or had key issues before the legislature in either a regular or special session in 2005 or 2006. Some of these issues included medical malpractice reform and the creation of the physicians' mutual; the privatization of workers' compensation; changes in severance taxes; efforts to eliminate third party bad faith lawsuits, joint and several liability and other "tort reform" measures; and the bond initiative to wipe out the pension debt for teachers' and other state workers' retirement funds.
- Of the top ten individual contributors to legislative winners, four were trial lawyers, four were affiliated with gambling and two with the coal industry. Contributions from the four affiliated with gambling accounted for nearly 50% of all gambling contributions to legislators.
- House Speaker Bob Kiss (D-Raleigh) received the most contributions of all House candidates. Kiss raised $188,097 and carried over an additional $103,269 from previous campaigns. He returned over $162,000 raised by an exploratory committee he formed to gauge support for running for a seat on the WV Supreme Court of Appeals.
- Senate President Earl Ray Tomblin (D-Logan) was the most successful fundraiser of all Senate candidates. Tomblin's contributions totaled $353,515. Nearly half ($176,251) was carried over from previous campaigns. Although Tomblin received the most contributions he did not make the top ten in expenditures.
- In most legislative races the candidate who raises and spends the most money wins. The only notable exception in 2004 was the race between former Senate Transportation Chairman Mike Ross (D-Randolph) and political newcomer Clark Barnes (R). Ross raised ($247,731) and spent ($241,649) more than three times as much as Barnes, who raised and spent $73,221.

- Candidates who spent the most money in their district won 78% (85 out of 109) of all contested seats for the legislature. Overall, legislative candidates spent more than $4.7 million in 2004. Senate candidates spent $1,890,725, and House candidates spent $2,909,090.
- Although the race between Ross and Barnes was the most expensive Senate race of 2004, contributions to Senate Minority Leader Vic Sprouse (R-Kanawha) and his Democratic opponent, former Supreme Court Justice Margaret Workman (D), exceeded $400,000. Sprouse raised $291,272 to Workman's $143,133. Sprouse and Workman spent $200,272 and $141,420 respectively.
- Contributions and expenditures in House of Delegates races tend to be highest in multi-member districts. In the 5-person, 27th district, the 10 candidates on the ballot in the general election raised nearly half a million dollars collectively. That race included four of the top ten fundraisers among House candidates, including House Speaker Bob Kiss (D) ($188,09), Delegates Sally Susman (D-Raleigh) ($102,729) and Virginia Mahan (D-Summers) ($56,928), and Robert Pulliam (R) ($72,913), who lost the election. Susman ($99,811), Pulliam ($72,713), and Kiss ($70,999) were among the top five House candidates who spent the most during the 2004 election. Candidates in Kanawha County's 30th district raised $440,866 collectively. Delegate Mark Hunt (D) was the top fundraiser in that race ($133,221), as well as the biggest spender among all House candidates ($132,378).
- The most expensive single-member district race was in the 57th district between Delegate John Doyle (D-Jefferson) and his Republican opponent Bob Murto. Doyle raised $35,315 to Murto's $14,394. Doyle and Murto spent $32,906 and $13,274 respectively. The 58th district race was a close second, with Delegate Locke Wysong (D-Jefferson) and Suzanne Morgan (R) each raising around $20,000, but Wysong outspending Morgan by $3,908. Both districts are in the state's eastern panhandle.

Reflections and Recommendations

The deeper one looks into the money chase that has become our electoral process, the more one finds the need for reform. Nearly ten years have passed since PERC-WV began tracking and reporting on campaign finance. In each of our reports, we have made recommendations on how to best reduce the influence of money in West Virginia politics. While some areas of concern discussed in previous reports have improved, others still need to be addressed. Our recommendations for 2004 are to address the lingering concerns outlined below, and adopt Clean Elections in West Virginia.

1996 Suggestion: Increase funding for Secretary of State's office in order to more closely monitor campaign filings.

Action to date: Significantly improved. Although perhaps due more to political will to enforce the law than with increased funding, both monitoring of candidates' financial disclosure reports and enforcement of campaign finance laws have significantly improved under Secretary of State Betty Ireland. One of her first official acts was to report candidates and PACs to county prosecutors for failing to file their campaign finance reports. Although state code has long given the Secretary of State this authority, Ireland is the first in recent memory to actually do so. Since taking office Ireland also hired a full-time compliance officer to audit campaign reports, and convinced the legislature to require candidates to keep campaign finance records for six months. While the six-month record-keeping requirement fell short of the two years Ireland initially proposed, it closed a significant loophole in state law that effectively prevented election officials from auditing campaign expenses.

Recommendation: While significant improvements have been made since the 2004 election, adequately funding the Secretary of State's Division of Elections to ensure effective oversight and candidate compliance with campaign finance disclosure laws remains a critical need.

1996 Suggestion: Require electronic filing of reports by candidates who raise more than $5,000.

Action to date: Improved. Thanks to former Secretary of State Ken Hechler, the Election Division posts candidates' financial reports on its website (www.wvsos.com/elections/cfreports). This has increased public access immensely. However, scanning and posting is a tedious and time-consuming task for Election Division staff that could be eliminated by electronic filing. Although former Secretary, now Governor, Joe Manchin put in place the first electronic filing system for candidates and Secretary Ireland continues to make improvements to that system, electronic filing of campaign disclosure reports remains voluntary.

Recommendation: Mandatory electronic filing by all candidates would streamline the filing and oversight of campaign finance reports, as well as make it easier for the public to know who is financing candidates' campaigns and how candidates are spending the money they raise. With all candidates filing electronically, a searchable on-line database of contributors to West Virginia political campaigns could be developed.

1996 Suggestion: Prohibit ‘co-mingling’ of campaign contributions between candidate committees.

Action to Date: Somewhat improved. Because of PERC-WV research and media coverage, the practice of candidates giving their campaign money to other candidates was closely scrutinized. It was discovered that there was already a law against this practice that had not been enforced. Legislators quickly “fixed” the problem of past non-compliance and now candidates may legally transfer monies from their campaign to another only after an election, when the law allows liquidation of such funds. Candidates now better understand the statutory limitations on campaign fund disbursement.

Recommendation: More attention needs to be focused on this practice. A loophole still exists where a candidate may indefinitely hold funds in a prior campaign account even after opening a separate account for the next election. Such funds held over in a prior campaign account become “excess funds” which the candidate can then legally distribute to other candidates. The letter of the law is being followed but the intent is violated. House Speaker Bob Kiss has at least three open committees and several former candidates and office holders have open accounts that they use to make campaign donations. Candidates should be required to close out prior campaign accounts when they move into the next election cycle; or additional limitations should be placed on the use of excess funds, to prevent candidates from using prior campaign accounts as a personal PAC.

2000 Suggestion: Require full disclosure of lobbying activities including compensation paid to lobbyists.

Action to Date: None. After elections, lobbyists begin the flow of money and perks to our lawmakers. How much money is spent by special interests to influence our laws?<sup>7</sup> Lobbyists have to report direct contributions and ‘entertainment’ given to candidates, but full disclosure by their employers is not required. Under West Virginia’s Ethics Act, revamped in 2005, lobbyists now report first-dollar spending on legislators and elected officials. The reformed Ethics Act also gave the state Ethics Commission, under fire for its inability to effectively police ethics violations by public officials and lobbyists, the power to launch its own investigations. Unfortunately, the revised Act failed to address the abuses that initially led calls to overhaul the Act in the first place, scandals involving former Senate Transportation Committee Chairman Mike Ross (D-Randolph) and former House Education Committee Chairman Jerry Mezzatesta (D-Hampshire).

In 2004, Ross voted to give $750,000 to promote a professional tournament at the Pete Dye Golf and Sporting Club where he owns land. Ross invested nearly $8 million dollars in the golf course and in exchange, the owner gave Ross and a business partner almost 150 acres at the resort, as well as an interest in some coal property outside the resort. Although Ross lost his 2004 re-election bid, the Ethics Commission ruled that Ross’s dealings were not a conflict of interest. In the scandal, Mezzatesta was investigated for violating a 1999 Ethics Commission ruling that allowed him to accept the position of grant administrator for Hampshire County schools provided he did not solicit funds. A second ethics complaint was filed against Mezzatesta for “double-dipping” by continuing to draw his salary from Hampshire County schools during legislative sessions. That complaint was dismissed on grounds that nothing in ethics law prohibits “double-dipping” of government salaries. An investigation revealed that Mezzatesta’s wife owned a video lottery company that stood to benefit by legalization of gray machines. For the past ten years Mezzatesta led the charge to expand gambling in the state and was the most out-spoken proponent to legalize the gray machines.

<sup>7</sup> According to the Center for Public Integrity, spending by registered lobbyists in West Virginia totaled $311,519 in 2004 alone, and $2,285,203 between 1996 and 2004. These figures DO NOT include lobbyist salaries/compensation. <http://www.publicintegrity.org/docs/hiredguns/9yr\_Spending\_Chart\_PDF\_WEB.pdf>.

Recommendation: West Virginia should adopt a law similar to Maryland’s that requires full disclosure by employers. Full disclosure would provide a more accurate picture of what special interests are willing to pay to influence government decision-making. Additionally, legislators should be required to reveal all investment real estate they own, as well as disclose potential conflicts of interest by listing spouse occupations.

2000 Suggestion: Require candidates to file at least three reports during the year between election cycles if they raise more than $5,000.

Action to Date: None. Reporting periods for candidates’ financial reports during the election year have become shorter and more frequent because of the passage of several PERC-WV backed election bills. However, in the off years between elections, candidates are required to file only one report. This allows a candidate to do a year of fundraising that goes unreported until a few weeks before the primary election. While many candidates do little fundraising during the off year, some candidates raise a substantial amount of their contributions during this time.

Recommendation: Require candidates to file at least three reports during the year between election cycles if they raise more than $5,000.

2002 Suggestion: In addition to comprehensive reforms like Clean Elections, West Virginia could consider placing additional limits on contributions to candidate committees. Spending limits could also be considered.

Action to Date: None. During every legislative session since 2003, Senator Truman Chafin has sponsored legislation to raise the limit on individual and PAC contributions to candidates from $1,000 to $4,000 per election. Fortunately, the Senate has either defeated or refused to take up this effort. Although several states allow unlimited contributions from individuals to candidates, many have limits similar to West Virginia, and at least a dozen states have even lower limits.<sup>8</sup> While no state has mandatory-spending limits, Vermont passed a comprehensive reform initiative in 1997 that featured public financing and strict limits on contributions from political parties, PACs and individuals (perhaps the lowest in the nation), as well as imposed strict spending limits on privately financed candidates. The spending and contribution limits were challenged, but upheld by the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Second District, which ruled that Vermont established two compelling governmental interests that justify its campaign spending limits: preventing the reality and appearance of corruption, and protecting the time of candidates and elected officials from the burdens of endless fundraising.<sup>9</sup> On June 26, 2006, however, the U. S. Supreme Court overturned the Second District ruling. The high court said that Vermont’s limits on how much a candidate could spend violated the landmark 1976 Buckley v. Valeo ruling, which equated such spending with free speech, and said that its limits on donations to a campaign were too stringent.<sup>10</sup>

Recommendation: Given the Supreme Court's ruling upholding Buckley v. Valeo, imposing spending limits on candidates is not an option. However, we can establish a system that provides full public financing to candidates who are willing to reject private funding and voluntarily agree to spending limits in exchange for receiving public funds. Legislation creating a public financing system could also include lower contribution limits for non-participating or traditionally funded candidates. Both Maine and Arizona incorporated lower contribution limits into their Clean Election laws<sup>11</sup>. Such reforms would be complementary to the "527" legislation adopted by the legislature in 2005 requiring that 527 groups register with and disclose their contributors to the Secretary of State's office. This reform was fueled by public outcry over the millions of dollars spent on negative political advertising, disguised as "issue advocacy", during the state's 2004 Supreme Court race<sup>12</sup>.

<sup>12</sup> West Virginia's contest earned national notoriety for its negativity, according to a report from the Justice at Stake Campaign and its partners, the Brennan Center for Justice at NYU School of Law and the Institute for Money in State Politics (see Deborah Goldberg, et al., "The New Politics of Judicial Elections 2004: How Special Interest Pressure on Our Courts Has Reached a 'Tipping Point' – and How to Keep Our Courts Fair and Impartial," Justice at Stake, <<http://www.justiceatstake.org/files/NewPoliticsReport2004.pdf>>). Independent groups poured millions into the race. One group, And for the Sake of the Kids, was largely funded by Massey Energy CEO Don Blankenship. Blankenship donated $2.4 million of the $3.6 million And for the Sake of the Kids reported raising in its filings with the Internal Revenue Service.

Key to Legislative Candidate Indexes

“Candidate Indexes” at the end of this report provide details on the sources individual legislative candidates relied upon to fund their 2004 campaigns. These tables include all general election candidates with separate tables for state Senate and House of Delegates candidates. Candidates are grouped by district for easy comparison. Italics indicate that race’s incumbent. If none is identified, he or she either lost the primary election or the race was for an open seat. Each candidate’s party is noted in parentheses. An asterisk indicates candidates defeated in the general election.

Total contributions raised and reported by each candidate are listed, followed by the amount and percentage from previous campaigns, other candidates, contributors associated with a candidate’s political party, candidates and their family members, and “identified special interests.” A percentage or dollar amount in bold indicates a candidate was in the top five for state Senate candidates, or top ten for House candidates, in that perspective category. Additional numbers may appear in bold if candidates are “tied” for a position.

The “Candidate Indexes” show the amount and percentage of “identified special interest contributions” came from selected “special interest groups.” Although PERC-WV uses 30 special interest groups to identify contributors, only half of them are included in the “indexes.” The majority of special interest groups chosen for inclusion were among the top ten contributing the most to legislative candidates during one or more of the last five election cycles (1996-2004). Other special interest groups were selected because they contributed significantly more to candidates in 2004 than during the previous election, while others were included simply for their relevance or close relationship to another special interest group(s).

Amounts and percentages are also given for the amount of a candidate’s special interest contributions from individual contributors versus political action committees, or PACs. The portion of a candidate’s contributions from small and large contributions is shown and broken into five categories. Although all are considered “special interest contributions,” those of $100 or less are more likely from “average” citizens, while those of more than $500 tend to come from contributors representing special interest groups. Amounts and percentages from four “special interest blocks”, defined on the following page, are also listed.

Candidates’ reported expenditures and ending balances are listed. Figures cited in these categories are taken from candidate reports filed with the Secretary of State’s office. PERC-WV did not audit expenditure reporting. A candidate’s reported expenditures may exceed his or her total contributions, usually a case of loan repayments being deducted from contributions but still counted as expenditures. However, some discrepancies are the result of math errors affecting total contributions.

Finally, the number of votes each candidate received is noted and is used to calculate the amount of money raised and spent per vote.

Defining Special Interest Blocks

Special interest groups often unite to advocate for, or oppose, specific legislation. PERC-WV identified four “special interest blocks,” described below, that are currently active on issues at the legislature. PERC-WV lists the amount and percentage of identified contributions each legislator received from these four blocks: “tort reform” advocates; special interests typically opposing increased environmental protection; special interests typically opposing increased taxes on alcohol, tobacco and gambling; and “progressive” special interests. Since some special interest groups are members of more than one block, total percentages may exceed 100%.

“Tort Reform” Advocates

A perennial legislative issue is some form of “tort reform.” Advocates for tort reform include virtually all members of the business community, health care providers and corporate lawyers who are seeking to put a limit on liabilities of manufacturers and the medical profession. The tort reform percentage assigned to each legislator reflects the percentage of identified contributions from these donors.

Special Interests Typically Opposed to Increased Environmental Protection (“Polluter” Block)

This block is comprised of regulated industries that typically oppose strengthening environmental regulation and enforcement. These groups include agriculture, chemical and manufacturing, coal, electric power, oil and gas, real estate and construction, solid waste, timber, transportation (automotive), and the corporate lawyers and lobbyists who represent these interests.

Special Interests Typically Opposed to Increased Taxes on Alcohol, Tobacco and Gambling (“Anti-Sin Tax” Block)

Increased taxation of alcohol, tobacco and gambling is a common legislative issue. Each of these special interests opposes the general concept of “sin taxes” and often work with each other to defeat proposals for increased taxes and regulations. The “anti-sin tax” percentage assigned to each legislator is the percentage of identified contributions coming from the alcohol (beverage), tobacco and gambling interest groups.

“Progressive” Special Interest Groups

Organized labor, education organizations, trial (consumer) lawyers, environmentalists and social justice advocates often align themselves on the same issues. This block tends to support common political candidates as well.
